ARTICLE I.

About 5 o'clock on the afternoon of Wednesday January 31, 1917 a dapper little man presented himself at the office of the secretary of state.

From that moment life was never the same again in Washington. Events, incidents and episodes of tremendous importance and public interest occurred in the navy department, as in all other departments, until the day when certain commissioners from Berlin signed their names to a document which Marshal Foch presented to them in the forest of Senlis.

As secretary of the navy I lived through those crowded months in the atmosphere of suppressed excitement which is inseparable from the capital of a great nation at war. A friend recently asked me my impressions of eight years as secretary of the navy. I replied, "Four years of quiet—then—on all sides to make Sherman's expression nautical."

Department heads, upon whose prompt and efficient action tremendous interests depended, had to keep their own heads amid the rumor and intrigues, criticism and conflict of advice which whispered or thundered in their ears. They had to keep their heads through days and nights of anxiety, when they were sending precious lives over seas of peril and into enterprises of danger. They had to keep their heads when sudden emergency demanded instant decision and action gives inside facts.

I am going to tell the story of those thrilling days as we saw and lived them in the navy department, and present some things that have never yet been told about the part the navy played.

The Frank Zacharias farm, which is sold by Mr. Zacharias to George Buck Holt, who will occupy the furniture. Mr. Zacharias retaining the residence fronting on the pike and eight and a half acres of land. The farm includes 78 acres and the price is said to have been $10,000.

Mr. Buckholtz sold his home across the pike from the Zacharias place to A. F. Dunham, parcels post carrier of the city mail service. The price is said to have been $3,000.

The Weldon Sanitarium place at Snyder street and the Rock Ridge road has been sold to Ray Foshlink of Tarentum hollow, who will occupy it.

Charles Schrock has transferred a property in Campbell street Snyder town, to Charles Harmon of Snyder town who will move to it.

A number of other sales are reported to have been closed.

Men With Cargo of Booze and Guns Are Given Their Freedom

Because it is said federal prohibition officers in Pittsburgh failed to pay full attention to the case of Charles Romeo and Sam Rovalle of Boswell, who were arrested here Monday evening in an alleged attempt to deliver a cargo of 36 quarts of whisky to a house in Water street the prisoners Wednesday night were discharged.

It was reported from the inference that the prime minister made a long statement appealing strongly to the rail men and transport workers who with the miners took up the strike alliance asking them to exercise restraint and not pre-emptive strike.

This plan however, does not seem to have had any effect. J. H. Thomas, general secretary of the National Union of Railway Men declared after the conference that he could not negotiate with the miners on an adjustment of the strike situation.

On the government side it was said the labor men were unable to present new arguments, giving the government any different view of the strike while the government it was understood did not indicate it was prepared to make any further concessions.

Thus the situation early this afternoon appeared unchanged and the outlook gloomy.

The erection of the new building which will be 150 by 110 feet will give 10,000 feet of floor space. The foundation will be made of brick enough to support additions if it is planned as the plant grows. The storage room will greatly relieve a situation which has confronted the people of this area.

The Rainbow company which is ready to operate a large fleet of trucks will make this its headquarters for the coke region. It plans to this place to make its actual lots in trucks will make immediate delivery to Scranton, Mo. Lehigh and Uniontown, Danville, Vandergrift and surrounding points.

It was a toss up between this city and Uniontown for the distribution center. Coalton was selected because of the central location of the railroad facilities it has and at present there are about 80 tons per car distributed in the vicinity.

Possession of the ground will be given in May. The deal is for a plot 270 feet long by 110 feet deep.

The present lumber buildings will be razed and the new building erected on the site. The other building will be rented.

Howard F. Frank is drawing up new plans for the building which will be fire-proof. Local labor will be used throughout the construction and a local man will be made manager. Orlie Stiel is the present general manager of the lines here.

Local men on the regional board of directors are F. J. Neff, J. C. Frank, J. A. Armstrong and Charles Danner.

In declaring in inference to the railroad labor situation in his message to Congress "that labor must join management in understanding that the public which pays is the public to be served and simple justice is the right, and will continue to be the right of all the people," President Harding uttered a truth that should be accepted and applied in the relations of all people not alone by those engaged in transportation.

All too generally has the contrary of this principle been made the ruling motive. Each different individual or group having to do with the factors of things for which the public must pay, has become so selfishly intent upon securing the maximum of wage profit and advantage that no thought or consideration is given to the weight or leasomeness of the burden imposed upon the vastly greater number of people comprising the paying public.

The disposition to achieve and to hold all the advantages gained preempted or acquired and the refusal to make joint or mutual concessions being still so persistent is one of the chief if indeed not the chief obstacle in the way of a return to those conditions in industrial and commercial life which are essential to a wide diffusion and enduring prosperity.

When the manufacturer, wholesaler, and retailer in merchandising when the producer and distributor of food products when the employers of labor and their workmen in the manufacturing, building and allied trades and when transportation executives and their employees all realize the necessity of accepting and acting upon the principles laid down by President Harding, and frankly, honestly and unselfishly concede that the public which pays is the public to be served, then and then only will the be laid a broad and deep foundation upon which we can securely build the structures of national prosperity, happiness and contentment of the people.

INAPATERS SHOULD DECIDE. In taking steps to secure bids for repairing Crawford Avenue by both paving block and the asphaltic re-surfacing methods, city council has provided opportunity to ascertain precisely the comparative cost of the two methods, hence will be able to ascertain whether it will be possible to proceed with this much needed improvement at this time or defer it until later.

The respective claims of the two methods have been set forth by interested persons. It is now up to them to show by figures just what they can do in the matter of saving the taxpayers' money. Meantime a demonstration of the re-surfacing method is to be made on other streets which should be helpful in assisting both taxpayers and the members of council to a decision as to what is the best method to employ on the main thoroughfares of the city.

The people of the city who have urged the employment of re-surfacing are not prejudiced against the use of paving block, but taking the expense of other and larger cities as their guide they are convinced that pavements have been made in street paving methods as applied to repair of streets, just as improvements were earlier made in the development of brick paving. As these improved methods involve an expense which is estimated to be but a small part of the cost of re-paving with brick it is regarded as a good business proposition to employ them even if necessary to replace the work within a comparatively short period. That being the situation the taxpayers, by whom the cost must eventually be paid should be allowed the privilege of deciding what they want after actual information and estimates as to what has been made available.

MARTIN A. KLEIER. Martin A. Kleier will live long in the hearts and memories of a host of his friends in Fayette county who admired his sterling qualities of frankness, courtesy, generosity, courage and his patient suffering during a long and painful illness.

In all matters of relationship, he was faithful to every trust imposed in him and fulfilled the requirements of a good citizen in all that the term comprehends or implies. He was freely accorded leadership because he inspired the confidence of his associates and dealt as equitably and honorably with his opponents as he was zealous in promoting the cause of his party. His death removed a prominent character from political and business life of the county but he leaves behind him a splendid heritage to those who would emulate his example.

HOW STEP WAS KEPT GERMAN MENACING MOVEMENTS IN 1917

read how shells had fallen in the little church of St. Gervais on Good Friday, 1918, turning the sacred precincts into a hideous shambles. Do you know that the United States played a part in ending the bombardment of Paris? It will interest you to learn how our navy contributed to the relief of the shell-shaken French capital.

Nation With Child's Heart.
And I will tell you a joyful tale. America is yet a young nation, and it has a strong, clean child heart. That is why, perhaps, when it went to war, its sailors based some of their code signals on nursery rhymes. Only a child-hearted nation would have thought of that. No German could think of such a thing, and in that very fact lay the usefulness of their signals. They were a part of our intelligence service. Just what part I will tell you before my story ends.

We have heard a lot about the importance of cables lately, and a little island, about 10 miles long, in the Pacific, bearing the comic opera name of Yap, has assumed a prominence out of all proportion to its size and commercial value merely because it is a convenient cable station.

You would think from all this talk that cables are absolutely essential to the maintenance of world-wide communications. Beyond doubt they are of tremendous importance, and no nation can afford to neglect its interests in the matter of submarine telegraphs.

Not Dependent on Cables

But what would you think if I told you that had Germany been able to sever the cables by which the United States was linked to London and Paris and American headquarters at Chauvin, we could nevertheless have communicated almost instantly with Lloyd George, or Clemenceau, or General Pershing? In like manner, although with more difficulty, we could reach every ship in the United States navy, wherever stationed, from the China sea to the Bay of Biscay.

The miracle which made this possible was created within a few months after we entered the war, and its accomplishment lifted from our shoulders one of the big anxieties which had been almost constantly present—the fear that some enemy raider or submarine might cut the cables, leaving us isolated from our soldiers in France, our allies and our fighting squadrons in war zone waters.

I want to tell you in some detail how this miracle was worked and about the great wireless station which can flash radio messages around the world.

Indians' "Wireless" System.

The early pioneer wending his way with his wagon train across our western prairies saw in the smoke signals of the Indian the earliest American attempts at communicating over long distances. It is a far cry from the smoke signals of the Indian to the story of this world-girdling radio station.

Where was it? Who built it? Those are questions that will be answered later on.

When it comes to hunting even Clemenceau, the tiger of France, hunting the tigers of India, got fewer thrills than any gob of Uncle Sam's navy on board a destroyer chasing submarines. Lumbering along through the jungle on an elephant for a big cat is tame work compared with cutting the waves at 30 miles an hour in pursuit of a fox whose presence is known to you only by the vibrations which the water carries from his processor.

We shall go on such a hunt before my story is ended, and I will tell you how the presence of the submarine in adjacent waters was detected, and how we were able often to distinguish one type of vessel from another, though both were beneath the waves.

There will be many interesting personalities in this narrative, and I shall attempt to give close-up glimpses of men who were conspicuous in the life of Washington and of European empires. Jones, Lloyd George, Albert of Belgium, Clemenceau, George of England, the Prince of Wales, Lord Northcliffe, Lord Reading, Admirals Beatty, Jellicoe and De Boni; Marconi and the Prince Udine are among those who moved in and out of the picture. And speaking of Prince Udine, I must not forget to tell you how he caught the measles.

Here's the Dapper Little Man.

But now to get back to the dapper little individual who presented himself at the office of the secretary of state on Wednesday, January 31, 1917, about 6 o'clock in the afternoon.

This gentleman came with a message for Secretary Lansing which had been waiting delivery for 12 days. That message made America's entrance into the war inevitable and sealed the doom of kaiserism. It was conveyed by Count von Bernstorff and it announced the beginning of unrestricted U-boat warfare by Germany on the morning of the following day.

We know now that Von Bernstorff received Germany's official declaration of merciless submarine warfare on January 19. On that day the Berlin Foreign Office advised him in code of the policy which had been decided upon.

On the same day Zimmerman, the German foreign minister, dispatched to Mexico his famous proposal that Carranza's country should make an alliance with Japan, launch a war against the United States and recover the "lost territory" of New Mexico, Arizona and Texas. I shall have more to say about that again.

German Secret Revealed.
Why did Bernstorff withhold the announcement until the 11th hour? Doubtless under specific orders from his government and because Germany, having decided to abandon all restraint and run all risks, wanted to gain for her new policy the full advantage of surprise. A premature announcement would have been warning to her victims and occasion for delay in execution. It would have opened the way for negotiations, and these Germany desired to avoid. This view is fully sustained by a secret document, unknown then to the American government or to any of its allies, but discovered months after the armistice. It is dated "Berlin, December 22, 1916"—a little more than a month before the date on which unrestricted U-boat warfare began—and is addressed to "B-36340-1." It is marked "strictly secret."

Admiral von Holtzendorff, chief of the German admiralty, was its author. This document named February 1 as the date for turning the U-boats loose under orders to spare nobody.

It declared England would be starved in five months—or by July 1. It declared the allies would be forced to surrender by August 1.

These exact dates were given. The first date is the only one which stood the test of events.

Expected America to Fight.

The probable entrance of the United States as a belligerent was foreseen, and Von Holtzendorff thus expressed himself as to the influence she would be likely to exercise upon the "trend of the war."

"As regards tonnage this influence would be negligible. It is not to be expected that more than a small fraction of the tonnage of the central powers lying in America and many neutral harbors could then be enlisted for the traffic to England."

"For the far greatest part of this shipping can be damaged in such a way that it can not sail in the decisive time of the first few months. There would also be no crews to be found for them."

Let me interrupt Admiral von Holtzendorff a moment to call attention to the fact that everything the Germans could do to make the admirals' prediction come true was done in a trice of February 1. Before making his call upon Secretary Lansing on the last day of January, Bernstorff had given instructions that the engines of all German ships lying in American waters must be destroyed, and these instructions had been carried out.

As a matter of fact, as far back as May, 1916, at the time of the excitement occasioned by the sinking of the Sussex, Bernstorff had notified the officers in charge of Germany's interned ships that they must be ready to destroy the engines whenever the order was given. (Some other things happened at this time, of which I will tell you later on. They will show you that the German ambassador did not monopolize all the foresight in making his plans in advance.)

Disabled All Ships.
Reporting upon the situation on January 31, Bernstorff says: "It was dangerous to allow any delay, for on the evening of January 31 our ships were seized by the American police. As I know, however, all of them, without exception, were made unfit for use before this occurred."

It was this effective work upon which Holtzendorff counted to cripple the United States if she decided to enter the war. Once in, he believed, whatever shipping she was able to command could be disposed of by the U-boats.

How Holtzendorff's calculations were upset is part of this story which will take a lot of satisfaction in telling.

Naturally, since the German admiral believed it would be impossible for the United States to find tonnage or to keep it afloat, he had very little fear of an American army. He wrote in the secret document: "Just as little decisive effect can be ascribed to any exertion to American troops, which, in the first place, can not be brought over through lack of tonnage."

Warning for All Time.

By such stupid underestimates of American resources were the Germans pursued by their own leaders to their own undoing. It is to be hoped for mutual welfare and the peace of the world that no nation will ever again underestimate the power and resourcefulness of America in war.

Finally Holtzendorff emphasized the importance of launching the U-boat terror without warning. "The beginning and the declaration of the unrestricted U-boat war must follow as quickly one upon another that there is no time for negotiating, especially between England and the neutrals."

The wholesomeness of this statement exceeded apprehensions.

The Gary acted at once without waiting for the cabinet meeting which was called for Friday, February 2. On Thursday, as the German U-boats were scurrying themselves to the port of their prey, all subs and stations were being notified to be in readiness for a possible mobilization order. The instructions which I sent to the whole fleet read as follows:

Navy Acts at Once.

Of course I was notified at once of the serious nature of the communication made by the German ambassador to Secretary Lansing. Its momentous character was immediately apparent.

Apprehension had been felt that Germany might do some intolerable thing, but this utter defiance of civilization,

this complete repudiation of pledges,

SECURITIES

THAT NEVER SLIP.

For years men have longed for them

—but had despised or having them with Mr. Dubiske & Co. brought to them through their right investigation of nationally known business enterprises the never slip securities.

When I went to the cabinet meeting called by the President for the afternoon of Friday, February 2, I had no more than any of my colleagues known what was to be the result of his deliberations.

But I took my seat at the table in the confidence that what ever might be the decision of this solemn and critical hour, the navy of the United States was prepared to sustain it.

THREE.

At half-past five he stopped in front of Godalming post office. To his surprise the girl handed him a wire, and Hugh tore the yellow envelope open quickly. It was from Denny, and it was brief and to the point:

"Phone message received. AAA. Must see you Carlton ten day after tomorrow. Going Godalming now. AAA. Message ends."

With a slight smile he noticed the military phraseology—Denny at one time in his career had been a signaler and then he frowned. "Must see you." She should—at once.

He turned to the girl and inquired the way to The Larches. It was about two miles, he gathered, on the Guildford road, and impossible to miss. A bigish house standing well back in its own grounds.

"Is it anywhere near a house called The Elms?" he asked.

"Next door, sir," said the girl. "The Elms across."

He thanked her, and having torn up the telegram into small pieces, he got into his car. There was nothing for it, he had decided, but to drive boldly up to the house, and say that he had come to call on Miss Benton. He had never seen a man who bent about the bush, and simple methods appealed to him—a trial in his character which many a boxer, addicted to tortuous cunning in the ring, had good cause to remember. What more natural, he reflected, than to drive over and see such an old friend?

He had no difficulty in finding the house, and a few minutes later he was ringing the front-door bell. It was answered by a maid-servant.

"Is Miss Benton in?" Hugh asked with a smile which at once won her heart.

"She has only just come back from London, sir," she answered doubtfully. "I don't know whether . . ."

"Would you tell her that Captain Drummond called?" said Hugh as he hesitated. "That I happened to find myself near here, and came on chance of seeing her."

Once again the smile was called into play, and the girl hesitated no longer. "Will you come inside, sir?" she said. "I will go and tell Miss Phyllis."

She ushered him into the drawing-room, and closed the door. It was a charming room, just such as he would have expected with Phyllis. Big windows, opening down to the ground, led out on to a lawn, which was already a blaze of color. A few great oak trees threw a pleasant shade at the end of the garden, and partially showing through them, he could see another house which he rightly assumed was The Elms. In fact, even as he heard the door open and shut behind him, he saw Peterson come out of a small summer-house and come into play, and the girl hesitated no longer. "Will you come inside, sir?" she said. "I will go and tell Miss Phyllis."

She continued hurriedly, "so splendidly clever, that even you would be a child in their hands."

Hugh endeavored to resemble his pleasure at that little word "even" and only succeeded in frowning horribly.

"I will be discretion itself," he assured her firmly.

"I suppose I shall have to trust you," she said. "Have you seen the evening papers today?"

"I looked at the ones that came out in the morning labeled six p. m. before I had lunch," he answered. "Is there anything of interest?"

She handed him a copy of the Evening. "Read that little paragraph in the second column."

"She pointed to it, as he took the paper, and Hugh read it aloud.

"Mr. Elvian C. Potts—the celebrated American millionaire—is progressing favorably. He has gone into the country for a few days, but is sufficiently recovered to conduct business as usual." He laid down the paper and looked at the girl sitting opposite. "One is pleased," he remarked in a puzzled tone, "for the sake of Mr. Potts. To be ill and have a name like that is more than most men could stand . . . But I don't quite see . . ."

"That man was staying at the Carlton, where he met Lukington," said the girl. "He is a multi-millionaire, over here in connection with some big steel trust; and when multi-millionaires get friendly with Lukington, their health frequently does suffer."

"But this paper says he's getting better," objected Drummond. "Sufficiently recovered to conduct business as usual."

"If he is sufficiently recovered to conduct business as usual, why did he send his confidential secretary away yesterday morning on an urgent mission to Belfast?"

"Search me," said Hugh. "Incredibly, how do you know he did?"

"I asked at the Carlton this morning," she answered. "I said I'd come after a job as typist for Mr. Potts. They told me at the Inquiry office that he was ill in bed and unable to see anybody. So I asked the office secretary, and they told me what I've just told you—that he had left for Belfast that morning and would be away several days. It may be that there's nothing in it; on the other hand, it may be that there's a lot. And it's only by following up every possible clue," she continued fiercely, "that I can hope to beat those bards and get daddy out of their clutches."

Drummond nodded gravely, and did not speak. For into his mind had flashed suddenly the remembrance of that sinister, motionless figure seated by the chauffeur. The wildest guess-work certainly—no vestige of proof—and yet, having once come, the thought stuck. And as he turned it over in his mind, almost prepared to laugh at himself for his crudity—millionaires are not removed against their will, in broad daylight, from one of the biggest hotels in London, to sit in hideous silence in an open car—the door opened and an elderly man came in.

Hugh rose, and the girl introduced the two men. "An old friend, daddy," she said. "You must have heard me speak of Captain Drummond."

"I don't recall the name at the moment, my dear," he answered jocosely—a jest which was hardly surprising—"but I fear I'm getting a little forgetful. You'll stop and have some dinner, of course."

Hugh bowed. "I should like to, Mr. Benton. Thank you very much. I'm afraid the hour of my call was a little informal, but being round in these parts, I felt I must come and look Miss Benton up."

His host smiled absentmindedly, and walking to the window, stared through the gathering dusk at the house opposite, half hidden in the trees. And Hugh, who was watching him from under lowered lids, saw him suddenly clutch both hands in a gesture of despair.

It cannot be said that dinner was a meal of sparkling gaiety. Mr. Benton was palpably ill at ease, and beyond a few desultory remarks spoke hardly at all; while the girl, who sat opposite Hugh, though she made one or two valiant attempts to break the long silences, spent most of the meal covertly watching her father. If anything more had been required to convince Drummond of the genuineness of his interview with her at the Carlton the preceding day, the atmosphere at this stricken and silent party supplied it.

As if unconscious of anything peculiar, he rambled on in his usual inconsistent method, heedless of whether he was answered or not; but all the time his mind was busily working. He had already decided that a Rolls-Royce was not the only car on the market which could break down mysteriously, and with the town so far away, his host could hardly fail to ask him to stop the night. And then he had not yet quite settled how to propose to have a closer look at The Elms.

At length the meal was over, and the maid, placing the decanter in front of Mr. Benton, withdrew from the room.

"You'll have a glass of port, Captain Drummond?" remarked his host, removing the stopper, and pushing the bottle toward him. "An old pre-war wine which I can vouch for."

Hugh smiled, and even as he lifted the heavy old cut glass, he stiffened suddenly in his chair. A cry—half shout, half scream, and stifled at once—had come echoing through the open windows. With a crash the MOUNT PLEASANT, April 14.—Council held a special meeting last evening and decided to advertise for bids for the purchase of a two-ton chassis, also a two-ton steel body power dump truck.

The matter of putting a top dressing on the walk to the cemetery was brought up and it was stated by Mr. Gearhart, chairman of the street committee, that the next work done by the street commissioner would be on the walk. It was also decided to give the street commissioner two 50-foot sections of fire hose for use on the open windows. With a crash the Stopper fell from Mr. Benton's nervous fingers, breaking the finger-bowl in front of him, while every vestige of color left his face.

"It's something these days to be able to say that," remarked Hugh, pouring out himself a glass. "What, Miss Benton?" He looked at the girl, who was staring fearfully out of the window, and forced her to meet his eye. "It will do you good."

His tone was compelling, and after a moment's hesitation, she pushed the glass over to him. "Will you pour it out?" she said, and he saw that she was trembling all over.

Real bargain days for the man who builds

Rents are high as ever, yet lumber and building materials have come down with a crash.

In many cases our prices are 40% lower than those of a year ago.

For the man who plans to build, repair, or remodel, this is certainly a favorable time.

The country as a whole is four years behind in its building program. Our own city needs 300 homes to bring conditions back to normal.

People must build, soon, and increased building is sure to bring higher prices. The present situation is the result of forced selling by manufacturers who are over-stocked.

These manufacturers were caught by the lull in buying and they must convert their stocks into ready money. In many cases they are selling at cost. When building begins again they will be quick to ask their legitimate profits once more.

We have a big stock of building materials, including all kinds of lumber, Vulcanite roofing, and Beaver Board, which we secured at favorable prices and which we will sell at a bargain.

Our other prices are in line. Take advantage of the opportunity. Come in and see us today.
